NYCBL Prime Stats: Western Division Championship

Niagara Powered by Adversity
The Power have seen it all this summer; a 22-7 start, national acclaim, followed by a 4-13 finish. At face value, it looks like Niagara was “lucky” to make the playoffs. In some respects that’s not entirely untrue, but further examination reveals a bit of a different story.

Make no mistake, the Power were as good as their record indicated in the first 29 games of the season. They outscored opponents by a more than convincing 151-100 (5.21 runs scored a game to 3.45 allowed), a ratio of over 2:1. They had one losing streak and it lasted for just two games. They had seven separate winning streaks. Their average margin of victory was 3.57 with the average defeat coming at a deficit of three runs. In short, the outcome was consistently decisive, but consistently in Niagara’s favor.

Right before the All-Star Break things began to turn sour. The aforementioned skid was more than just a threat to the Power’s playoff chances; it was maddeningly frustrating. Thanks in no small part to a 17-0 release of said frustrations against the Genesee Rapids, the Power actually managed to outscore their collective opponents by 10 runs in a stretch that saw them win just four of their final 17 games. The real thorn in Niagara’s craw was how they were losing games: close.

Of the 13 losses the Power sustained in the last three weeks of the season, nine were by a lone run, five by two, and one by four. In the first 29 games, despite consistently winning by large margins, Niagara boasted an impressive 5-1 record in games decided by one run and a sterling 9-3 in games decided by 2 or less. In the final 17, the script flipped—the Power went 0-8 in games decided by one and a combined 1-13 in those of the two or less category.

Perhaps all the aggravation has served as motivation as the Power have left little doubt of their potency following their impressive 2-1 dismissal of the NYCBL’s defending champion Hornell Dodgers. Ranked number one in scoring offense in the regular season, the Dodgers were able to put up seven runs twice against Niagara and yet still found themselves outscored twice by a Power offense that averaged seven runs a game for the three game-series.

Having already been in win-or-go-home mode for the better part of the past two weeks, Niagara makes a strong case for the playoffs most dangerous as well as most volatile team. If the squad can regain its pitching prowess that had them place in the top five in multiple pitching categories during the regular season, there are few remaining pitching staffs capable of besting them.

Oilers look to Short-Circuit Power with Lethal Staff
The “Pitching wins Championships” adage continues to ring throughout contemporary baseball just as loudly “Defense wins Championships” does through the rest of the sporting world. If you subscribe to that belief than chances are you like postseason prospects of the Olean Oilers. Scratch that; you love them.

By now even the causal NYCBL fan is familiar with Austin Bizzle’s exploits—he’s a regular feature in the NYCBL Game Day releases. With that in mind, there’s more to the Oilers staff than the regular season innings pitched leader, and the current postseason strikeouts king.

Following Bizzle (Alabama State), are Aaron Phillips, Ryan Pordes (El Camino College), Brandon Schlimm (St. Bonaventure), and Adam Rigney (Nichols College). Here’s a few constants the five shared during the regular season worth your attention: all five have thrown at least one complete game, all five have an ERA of 3.00 or better, and all had a BAA against of .257 or lower.

There’s a reason, the Oilers were the quickest team to advance to round two of the postseason. They took the team with the second-highest batting average in the regular season and held them to a paltry .239, a mere 16 for 67. Olean pitchers took the top hitters for average in the summer of 2015 in Marty Napleton (St. Joseph’s College) and JT Pittman (Le Moyne) and held them two a combined two runs and one RBI in two games. They held the league’s fourth-best scoring team, who averaged 4.46 per game in the regular season, to just three runs in two contests. Geneva ranked second in the league with a slugging percentage of .360 prior to the playoffs, but had just three extra-base hits in 67 at bats in the postseason. Olean earned a sweep despite its offense trailing the team in ended up outscoring in batting average (.183), on base percentage (.265 to Geneva’s .320), and slugging percentage (.233 to the Twins’ .284). That’s what you might call power pitching. With that in mind, the offense has to wake up. The Niagara Power are surging and currently averaging seven runs per game in the playoffs. They’re prone to streakiness, but have the ability to erupt at any given moment, having scored 17 runs in two separate games this season. Batters not named Hollins or Edwards are hitting a .300 (6-for-20). Relying on excellent pitching can get you far in baseball, but you have to at least score one run.
NYCBL PRIME STATS: EASTERN DIVISION CHAMPIONSHIP

NYCBL Prime Stats: Outlaws Offense on the Loose

Surprising to no one, but awe-inspiring to all, the Oneonta Outlaws continue to do what they do best; hit lots of baseballs. When your top five at-bat leaders slash totals mirror those of perennial MLB all-star Adrian Gonzalez, you sleep well at night if you have the fortune of being on their team-opposing pitchers probably a little less so. The quintet of Jordan Bradley (Wofford), Zack Blonder (Maryville), Tyler Bruno (Iona), CJ Krowiak (Binghamton) and Trevor Putzig (Tennessee Tech) posted a combined line of .298/.368/.378 in the regular season. With Krowiak out of the fold for the postseason, mid-July addition Ryan Nelson (Quinnipiac) has stepped impressively. Playing 15 games in the regular season, the righty posted a ludicrous .367/.404/.551, collecting 10 RBI and 7 runs scored to close out the season. He’s kept that momentum going in the postseason, currently hitting .500 with three runs scored and four RBI in three playoff games.

As for the usual suspects, Blonder continues to rake with a .500 playoff batting average, two RBI and two runs scored. Bradley is right in line with a .467 average, three RBI and five runs scored, and just behind him sits Putzig, hitting .417/.462/.583 with a run and two RBI. Bruno has struggled a bit but given the small sample size of 11 at bats, it’s not yet time to discard his contributions, especially when he’s managed to cross the plate three times in as many games.

All totaled, seven of the Outlaws starters are hitting above .250 entering the second round of the playoffs, and all but one player with more than one appearance in the lineup have an on base percentage north of .333. It should come as no surprise that after a round one victory over Cortland in which the Outlaws outscored the Crush 21-10 in three games that the former is first in team on base percentage (.420) slugging percentage (.423), .OPS (.843) and tied for first in runs scored (21). They are second only to Niagara in batting average with a stellar mark of .337. All of this comes while the Outlaw pitching staff, which ranked 5th in the regular season in total runs allowed (3.59), continues their steady work allowing just 3.33 runs per game.

The Outlaws next test will come against a streaking Junior Chiefs team that has made marked improvement in their own pitching staff as both teams vie for the right to represent the East in the 2015 NYCBL Championship.

Syracuse Pitching Improvement Chief in Playoff Chances

If nothing else comes of this postseason, the Junior Chiefs can claim NYCBL bragging rights in the Salt City for the summer of 2015. Simply put the cross-town Salt Cats owned the regular season series in a one-sided 7-3 tilt. The Cats outscored the Chiefs 42-19 in the first nine of those contests before an 11-3 flip of the script in the regular season finale improved the ratio to a still-daunting 3:2. The latter performance turned out to be much more foreshadowing than fluke as the underdog.

For the sake of context, consider the slash lines for the Junior Chiefs; they hit for .201/.353/.268 against the Salt Cats in the regular season. Would it surprise you to learn that these numbers have actually decreased in the postseason? It’s strange but true. The victorious Chiefs hit for totals of .181/.254/.229 in their round one triumph. How did they manage such a feat? It all comes back to pitching and its beautiful relationship with winning.

In the three games against their Syracuse foes, not one Chief who set foot on the rubber allowed more than two runs. The top three in innings pitched had WHIP numbers less than or equal to 1.00 and four of the five total hurlers held the opposition to batting average of .188 or lower. This stellar play came against a Salt Cats team that hit for a slash of .271/.378/.327 against the Chiefs in the regular season. In the playoffs the Cats hit for just .173/.271/.202. For a team that ranked just 6th in total runs allowed (earned and unearned) in the regular season, the pitching staff is making the jump at just the right time. If their hitting can upgrade from timely to timely and consistent, Syracuse bragging rights may be just a footnote on what the Junior Chiefs accomplish when all is said and done.
